AT the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the ABBOTSFORD CLUB, held on Monday the 1st February 1841.

“ The Secretary having placed at the disposal of the Club a Manuscript, made by him from the CHARTULARY OF BALMERINO, Mr DENNISTOUN moved, ‘ That the Meeting return their best thanks for this offer, and request that Mr TURNBULL will undertake to edit that Chartulary, and to print it at the expense of the Club.’ This was unanimously agreed to.”

AT a MEETING of COUNCIL of the ABBOTSFORD CLUB, held on 14th May 1841,

“ The Secretary reported to the Council, that the ‘ CHARTULARY OF BALMERINO,’ (which, at the last Annual Meeting, was remitted to him as Editor, and ordered to the press,) was nearly ready ; and having suggested the propriety of uniting with it the ‘ BOOK OF LINDORES,’ which was of a similar extent, the Council approved of the suggestion, and desired the Secretary to have it transcribed, and to proceed with it immediately.”

EDINBURGI: MDCCXLI.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Abbey of Balmerino, dedicated to Our Lady and St Edward the Confessor, was founded by Alexander II. and his mother Queen Ermen-gard, widow of William the Lion,¹ in the year 1229.² The foundation charter by Alexander, is dated 3d February 1230-1, and induces an inference that her Majesty was then dead, although the Chronicle of Melrose,³ as well as Wyntown and Fordun,⁴ assign the year 1233 as the period of her demise. The Prior of Lochleven says,⁵

“ And þe yhere neyft foluand,
Ermygere, quhylum of Scotlaud
Qweyn, þe Kyng Willamys Wyf,
Deyd, and endyd had hyr lyf.
Of Balmwrynaeh in hyr day
Of Mwnkis feho fowndyt þe Abbay:

“ Anno Domini M.CC.XXIX. facta est abbatia Sancti Edwardi de Balmorinac a rege Alexandro et matre ejus; et missus est illuc conventus de Melros, cum domino Alano Abbate suo, in die sancte Lucie virginis,” (Dec. 13.)—Chron. Mailros. p. 141. Bannatyne Club edition.

² Boece is pleased to assign the honour to this monarch—“ King William foundit the Abbay of Balmeruoht, bot it was dotat be Emengard, his wife.”—Book xiii. c. 10.

⁴ Lib. ii. 59. edit. Goodal.

⁵ B. vii. c. ix. l. 355.

Whatever may have been the precise day of her death, Queen Ermen-gard lived long enough to prove a most generous benefactress to the abbey. She expended 1000 marks during her lifetime in the purchase of land, and left 200¹ more to be applied by her executors to a similar investment. (Vide Charters, Nos. 5 and 7.)

The abbey was supplied by a colony of monks of the Cistercian order from Melrose.² Their first abbot, as appears from the Chronicle of that abbey, was—

I. ALAN. He ruled over the convent five years and a few months. His demise is recorded in the Chronicle of Melrose,³ sub “Anno M.CC.XXXVI. dompnus Alanus primus abbas sancti Edwardi de Balmurinach obiit in vigilia apostolorum Petri et Pauli, (Jun. 28,) cui succellit dompnus Radulphus ejusdem domus cellerarius.”

II. His successor RALPH, the cellarer, had a longer sway, as according to the same Chronicle,⁴ he lived till 1251. “Anno Domini M.CC.LI. obiit Radulfus abbas de Sancto Edwardo, cui succellit Johannes, ejusdem domus monachus et quondam prior de May.”

III. JOHN, the third abbot, appears to have resigned office the year following his appointment thereto. “Anno Domini M.CC.LII. Johannes abbas de Sancto Edwardo fuo cessit officio, et dompnus Adam portarius de Melros ei succellit.”⁵

IV. The infirmities of age compelled ADAM to resign in 1260. “Anno

V. This ADAM, according to Fordun,² died in 1270. And we learn from the same authority that his successor was—

VI. WILLIAM DE PERISBI. When he died, or who was his successor, cannot now be traced. Possibly William de Perisbi was the abbot of Balmerino who attended Margaret, daughter of Alexander III. to Norway, when about to be married to Eric, king of that country, and who, on his voyage homeward was, with Bernard de Monte-alto, and many others, unfortunately drowned.³

VII. The next whom we find is WILLIAM, who swears fealty to Edward I. at Berwick, 28th August 1296.⁴

VIII. After William, no one occurs till HUGH, who witnesses a charter by Thomas Earl of Angus, ratified by David II. 10th March 1368.

IX. JOHN DE HAYLIS, who next appears, is the only one that makes any prominent figure in the pages of history. In 1408, (10 Henry IV.) we find the following letter of safe conduct granted to him on his return from France.

On 26th April 1416, (4 Henry V.) another letter of safe conduct is granted to him, John Forester of Corstorfin, knight, and Walter de Ogilby, esquire, with forty horsemen, going to England as Commissioners to treat for the ransom of James I. King of Scotland.² On 16th September 1423, (2 Henry VI.) another letter of safe conduct is granted to him and other Commissioners, with fifty-four retainers going to London with reference to a similar transaction.³ Like letters are granted to him and others going to Durham, with a retinue of twenty attendants, 13th and 20th December same year.⁴ And on 9th June 1425, another safe conduct is issued in favour of him and other ambassadors from King James to the court of Rome, with fifty attendants.⁵ An indenture between him and Henry, Bishop of St Andrews, as to the administration of the sacraments in the chapel of St Ali,⁶ forms No. IV. of the Appendix to this volume.

X. John de Haylis seems to have been succeeded by RICHARD, who witnesses a protestation by the abbot and monastery of Melrose, against appearing in the king's court for the lands of Kinross, 8th May 1441.⁷

² To the politeness of Charles Baxter, Esq., I am indebted for the inspection of several of the old muniments preserved in the Naughtan Charter Chest. I subjoin notes of a few of the deeds granted by Abbot Robert and two of the Commendators.

NAUGHTAN CHARTERS.

1. Robert, Abbot of Balmerino, and Convent grant to Peter Crichtoun of Naughtane, miles, in liferent, and to his son David Crichton, and his heirs whatsoever in fee.—“Omnes et singulas terras nostras de Cathillis; reservatis tamen nobis et successoribus nostris omnibus piscationibus five piscariis, exceptis piscariis per dictum Petrum occupatis tenore confectionis presentis precepti.”—Dated 21st January 1539.

2. The same Abbot Robert and Convent grant to the same parties, the said lands of Cathills,—“Reservatis tamen omnibus piscationibus sive piscariis et omnibus aliis piscibus cum omnibus assumentis a fluxu aque usque ad refluxum cum omnibus assumentis pertinentibus et spectantibus ad dictas piscarias libero introitu et exitu.”—“Reddendo annuatim—Octo marcarum usualis monete regni scecie—unacum summa quatuor mercarum monete predite ratione augmentationis extendẽ in toto ad summam duodecim mercarum,” at Whitsunday and Martinmas. “Necnon tres fectas ad tria placita capitalia baronie nostre de Balmurinaeh.”—Dated 16th October 1539.

3. Precept by the said Abbot Robert and Convent in favour of the foresaid David Crichton and Jonet Leslie, his spouse, and the heirs of their bodies, whom failing, to the heirs whatsoever of David, of all the fishings, “inter nigrum lapidem ad caput portus piscariarum de Cathillis ad orientem et a dicto portu ab orienti abhinc tendẽ linealiter ad occidentem ad Thornyflak et abhinc usque ad refluxum maris super Dreuas piscando seu prendendo non transgrediendo limites de lie Mawrag portibus ab una et altera jacentes infra dominium nostrum de Balmerinath.”—Dated 15th June 1546.

4. Instrument of Seisin of the lands of Cathills by the same Abbot Robert to the same parties.—Dated 23d May 1552.

5. Precept of Clare Constat by John Commendator of Balmerinoth, in favour of William Crichton, for infefting him in the lands of Cathills, as heir to David Crichton his brother, reserving the fishings.—Dated 25th June 1572.

last Abbot, and died in 1558. Bishop Lesley briefly notices his death.—“Thar deceifed about the fame tyme, (August 1558,) the Abbot of Balmurinoche; quhilk was gevin to Maister Johne Haye.”¹

This John Hay, the first and last Commendatory Abbot of Balmerino, was Master of Requests to Queen Mary, and was probably a member of the family of Naughtan.² How long he held the commendatorship, or who was his successor, does not immediately appear. In 1598, Sir James Elphinstone, Secretary of State to James I. had the lands of the abbey erected into a temporal lordship, in favour of him and his heirs male, by charter under the great seal,³ 20th February 1603-4, and thereby took his seat in parliament as Lord Balmerinoch. His chequered fate is familiar to all who are intimate with the history of their country.

The revenues of Balmerino in 1561, at the dissolution of the monasteries, were in money £704, 2s. 10½d,—in grain of different kinds, 43 chalders, 6 bolls, 3 firlots, and 1 peck—and 763 heads of poultry.⁴

The “Liber de Balmorinach,” from which the subsequent pages are printed, is a small octavo volume preserved in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates. It consists of twenty-six leaves of parchment, and is corroborated by a notandum in the handwriting of the early part of the 17th century:

6. Preept of Clare Constat by Henry Commendator of Balmerinoth, in favour of Alexander Crichton, of the lands of Cathills, as heir to his father William. Dated 10th January 1585.

7. Preept of Sasine by Henry Commendator of Balmurinoche of the fishings—“de Kilhurnis et Helwieden (Holmden) in aqua de Taya,” in favour of Alexander Crichton as heir to David his uncle. Dated 10th January 1585.

The Colophon—in an autograph of much more recent date than the body of the manuscript, runs thus :—

“ Liber Sancte Marie de Balmorinach. Qui eum alienaverit fit ipse alienatus a regno Dei . Scriptum est hoc per fratrem Laurencium predicti loci. Anno Domini m°.cccc^{mo} fexto x°. Amen.”

This doubtless does not signify that the chartulary was penned by Brother Laurence, but that his was the anathema ;—one which will be fully responded to by every good Christian. It is twice repeated on the fly leaves of the volume.

It is to be hoped that the eyes of Abbot Robert were closed in death before the destruction of that noble edifice over which he had so long presided. If not, the event probably accelerated his demise. Lesly informs us that it was pulled down by the Lords of the Congregation and their rabble-rout, on their way from St Andrews—where they commenced their outrages—about the end of August 1588. And most effectually did “ the malevolent, maledicent, recalcitrating, ignorant Puritans ” (as Kellett calls them¹) do their work ! It is impossible even to allude to such diabolical occurrences coolly.

“ Rhubarb, O, for rhubarb, of the Mother Church must admit, that a sad laxity of discipline and lethargic indifference to their duties had crept in among those to whom had been committed the custody of religion—so that, “while the good men slept, the enemy sowed tares;”—and that, in consequence of this neglect, it pleased God to permit the evil passions of fierce men to work out a dire desolation. In England, the scourge of the Church was that man who had won for himself from Rome the title of “Defender of the Faith;”—in Scotland, the destroyers were a barbarous and selfish nobility, followed by a horde of savage retainers and the “rascal multitude,”—as Knox himself terms them—who scarcely could boast even of the name of freemen. In England, the Reformation preserved religion and decency—in Scotland, the Deformation created a moral waste. It was a war of extirpation, not a measure of reform. These demons battled even with stone and mortar, and while they abused unto the death the professors of religion, they levelled, in their brutal zeal, its temples with the dust.¹ The impelling cause of all their doings was avarice and a distaste for the restraint of authority. The spirit of the leaders in this “unholy work” is yet, under an altered guise, to be traced in the rebellious turbulence of a General Assembly, and that of their vassals in the salvators of Jedburgh. They did indeed “pull down the nests,” and the “rooks” took flight, and were succeeded by any other than “birds of Paradise.” A curious and uncomely ornithological variety¹ appeared, which settled after its own habits in the land, and at the present time an impartial spectator may witness these strange birds tearing to pieces their own awkward and ungainly nidification ; while the old rooks are quietly enjoying the confusion, and are preparing to assert once more their ancient reign. Balmerino Abbey is beautifully situated on an eminence in the immediate vicinity of the Tay. It stands on the south bank of the river, about twelve miles from its mouth, and the site commands a view of the estuary as far up as its junction with the Earn, overlooking, towards the north, the Carse of Gowrie and an extensive range of diversified scenery, terminated in the remote distance by the Grampians. It is now the property of Francis Archibald Stuart, Esq., a cadet of the house of Moray.

from six slightly foliated pillars—a sacristy, or perhaps a vestry, formerly connecting it with the transept of the church—the fraternity, which is quite entire, with two cells adjoining—and portions of a more modern erection, no part of the old abbey remains. The church, with the exception of a few feet in height of the nave and north transept, has been levelled with the dust, and the very foundations of the single row of pillars which supported its roof were not long since removed. However, after patient investigation, sufficient traces have been discovered to enable my friend, the Rev. G. G. Milne of Cupar, who, for nearly twenty years, has from time to time visited these interesting ruins with the eye of an antiquary, to provide the annexed ground-plan of the abbey as it originally existed. The bosses of the chapter-house arches seem to have contained armorial bearings, now wholly effaced: on one a shield remains, charged with a bend; but the rest of the blazon is quite indistinct. On the north corner of the modern portion of the building is a shield bearing a fess, between what seem to be three billets, or cross-crosslets, but which are rendered altogether unintelligible by time and moss.

Nearly all traces of the old orchard, as also of what appears to have been a fish-pond, have vanished. A picturesque Spanish chesnut tree, probably coeval with the foundation of the monastery, and supposed to be the largest of the kind in Scotland, measuring in girth, one foot from the ground, 17 feet 8 inches, still remains at the east end of the building.

pleased, among innumerable stultitudes, to denominate the cloisters of the chapter-house “an arcade, which in all probability formed a portion of the fraternity or refectory where the monks dined.” Had this person been a Christian, he would have known so much of architecture as to have avoided this blunder. I refer to this preposterous publication, in order to record my protest against the wretched system of book-making now prevalent under the guise of topographical descriptions. The nobility and gentry of Scotland appear freely to encourage any trash obtruded upon them by itinerant hawkers: when will they unite in the support of any experienced individual or individuals competent and willing to undertake the painful labour of a county history?

Ground-Plan of Balmerino Abbey.

Views, said to be, of Balmerino Abbey occur in Cardonnell's "Picturesque Antiquities," 1788; in Grose's "Antiquities of Scotland," 1789-91; and in Swan's "History of the County of Fife," 1840; but they are all mere fictions. The wiseacres have selected for illustration not the chapter-house—which, as above said, is in reality almost the only part of the old structure remaining, and which faces the visitor on his approach to the ruins presenting a beautifully picturesque vista—but the back part of the comparatively modern building, evidently patched up after the Deformation as a dwelling-house, or hunting seat, for the Elphinstone family, and altogether devoid of any style of ecclesiastic architecture. They might with equal fidelity have given a sketch of the West Kirk of Edinburgh, or any similar barn-like heap of stones, and called it the Cathedral of Lichfield! As a tailpiece to the present introductory remarks, is a woodcut fac-simile of Balmerino as represented (!!) in a curious map of Scotland, contained in a MS. of Hardyng's Chronicle, in the Bodleian Library, Arch. Seld. B. 26, and which is engraved in Gough's "Anecdotes of British Topography," II. 579.

Of the Common Seal of the abbey, a fac-simile—excellently executed in lithography by Mr Leith, from the original in my possession—is impressed on the title; and, prefixed to the first page of the text, is that of one of the abbots—perchance of Alan—done by the same ingenious hand from the beautiful drawing by Howlett belonging to the Bannatyne Club; for the use of which, and many other favours, I am indebted to my friend, David Laing, Esq.

I cannot part from Balmerino without recording my sense of the generous hospitality and kindness shown to me and my camerados, on a recent pilgrimage to that once hallowed spot, by the Rev. John Thomson, minister of the parish—a gentleman well qualified to represent the ancient abbots in the exercise of those social virtues commended by St Paul, and possessed of many more important merits ; and whose only misfortune it is to be Minister of the Kirk instead of Lord of the Abbey.

“ Transcribed from the original charter, in the possession of Margaret Walker, at Rathillet, near Balmerinoch, an. 1819.”

No. X.

[The following letter, having reference to the preceding charter, is preserved in the same volume of General Hutton's Collections. The writer was minister of Kilmany, and is described in the “New Statistical Account” of that parish as “an amiable man, a conscientious minister, and a considerable antiquary.” This latter averment his correspondence certainly does not instruct. He died at his “manse” in 1792. The ground assigned for the “translation” of the kirk in 1611 is amusing, and probably correct. The Countess must have been sorely annoyed by the intolerable nuisance of their vile presbyterian bellowings.]

[From Hutton's Collections, Adv. Bibl., Vol. VI.]

KILMENY, 24th March, 1789.

79 “SIR,

“ I hope you received by post, some time ago, a short letter from me in answer to your obliging favours of the 30th January. Since Mrs Hutton's death, (on the 18th last,) I have been no where abroad, and for some weeks have been ailing much, but am better now. Meantime I have been making what enquiries I could about the Abbey of Balmarinoch. On Saturday I received a charter given by the Commendatarius of the Monastery, dated August 1574. It's short and concise; wrote in Latin. The language (considering the time) I think is ornate, in so far as I can read it. There are so many contractions, and so many words defaced, that I can make but little of it ; but such as are accustomed to read old writings (which I scarcely can) may understand the whole. The wax-seal appended to it distinctly bears the impression of the Virgin at full length, and the child in her arms. Its figure is oval ; and round the margin, a motto in old Saxon characters, which to me is illegible. What words of the charter I can read, I'll write on the last page by themselves. I am going to-morrow, with some others, to visit the abbey, that I may give all the intelligence I can, and will leave this unfinished till the next day.

“(Thursday 26th)—I was at the abbey yesterday ; but unluckily most of the people I expected intelligence from were not at home, and the day was bad ; so that I could not stay to survey it as I meant to have done. Among the venerable remains, St Mary's Chapel is the most entire, built of the finest stones, and so durable that the marks of the chissel are yet upon them. Not in the least blasted. It's beautifully arched, and the roof supported by six pillars, the finest I have seen ; and the niches for the altar and font-stone are quite distinct. There is a large vault on each side ; one of which they call a pit, in which I found a number of cattle belonging to the tenant of the farm ; the other had been a kitchen, and in it likewise are a brew-house, as appears by the vents of each ; and the oven is yet entire. In the story above, some vaults yet remain, in which the nuns, it's said, were lodged ; and on the west side, a yeard called the Cloyster Yeard, adjoining to which is the quire or vestry of the church, from south to north. It's now razed to the foundation. The church stood from west to east, and part of the back-wall yet stands, and the foundations of the pillars are visible. I could hear nothing about the queen's grave, but think I could guess at the spot ; for a great way on the back-wall the earth is high, and it's probable there are vaults below. The churchyard is large, and is full of trees. East from that is the mansion-house, part of which yet stands, and the tenant lives in it. Two stone windows in the front have the impression of arms on them ; and on the north end there is a bartisan, as they call it, looking towards the river. Behind is a large orchard, wherein some fruit trees still stand ; and a walnut and an elm tree, very old, the grossest of their kinds I ever saw. The great gate fronts the west, and about it are the office-houses. The whole property belongs to the Earl of Moray. It has been used as a quarry, I believe, since the Reformation, and continues to be so still, and little of it now remains. It's seven years since I saw it before, and now the hewn stones of one of the pillars in the chappell, next to the side-wall, are driven down. It's shocking to see it. The whole will soon be ruined. In all the houses and dykes thereabouts the carved hewn stones of the abbey are to be seen. Lord Balmerino's family lived there long. In 1611, the church was translated to about a quarter mile's distance to the eastward, because (it's said) the countess could not bear the noise of the psalms on Sunday. This is all the intelligence I can give at present; if more occurs afterwards it shall be at your service. One Mr Alexander Melvill, farmer at Peasehills, in the neighbourhood, who favoured me with this charter, tells me of another, dated either 1589 or 98—is to procure me a sight of that likewise. I showed him your letter, and he is eager to do what he can to gratify you. He is a sensible worthy man, and most obliging. He has this charter in trust from the poor family it belongs to, and it seems it never has been renewed. I much wish you saw this; and if you incline you might write him, asking the favour. I could transmit it to you by the Dundee-Edinburgh carrier, who passes here weekly, and he would send it by the Kelso carrier from Edinburgh. And this way of sending letters would be most regular, as I'm seldom in Cupar unless on presbytery days. I must write what I can of the charter in a separate paper, for want of room here; and I am, with great respect,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

ANDREW HUTTON."

"P.S.—The feu which this charter belongs to consists of a house and barn and a yeard, not exceeding half a rood of ground altogether, nay not so much. I saw it the other day. The yearly duty it now pays is 3s. 4d. sterling."

In another communication to the General, Mr Hutton says, "I went to Dunbog, and found that the place (where the mansion-house, the property of Sir Thomas Dundas) was formerly called Gadvan, a preceptory of Balmerinloch Abbey, whercin four monks did statedly reside."

POST IMPRESSUM.

SINCE the Introductory matter was printed off, I find that at least one abbot must have intervened between Henry (XIII.) and the Bishop of Ross (XIV.) John, abbot of Lindores, was present at the condemnation of Sir John Borthwick for heresy, in May 1540.¹ He was appointed a member of the Parliamentary Committee for discussion of Domes, 1542, again on the 3d December 1543,² and elected Lord of the Articles, 7th November 1544.³ In August 1560, he attended the parliament which established the deformed religion. This he embraced, and was then appointed a Lord of the Articles as a reward for his sinful apostacy.⁴

INTRODUCTION.

THE Abbey of Lindores, dedicated to Our Lady and St Andrew the Apostle, was founded by David Earl of Huntingdon about 1178, on his return from the Holy Land, after the capture of Ptolemais. Boetius informs us, that the terrors and dangers of his homeward voyage induced this act of grateful piety. His narrative, in the quaint vernacular of the Archdean of Moray, is as follows :

“ At last, quhen King Richard had distroyit this town of Achon, and was returnand in Italy, ane sudden tempest feverit his navy : throw quhilk he was destitute of friendis, and finaly, be treasoun of certane evill cristin men, he was brocht to Hary, Emprioure. The schip that Erle David was intil, be rageand tempest was fa brokin, that many of thaim quhilkis war in hir perist, and he narrowly eschapit with his life. Efter this he was tane be the inhabitantis of this land, and brocht to Alexandria, quhare he was haldin lang time in preson : quhill at last he was coft be marchandis of Venice and brocht to Constantinople. Nocht lang efter he was brocht to Venis, quhare he was redemit be merchandis of Ingland and brocht to Flanderis ; and thair he pullit up falis, to returne in Scotland ; and, quhen he was litill departit fra the land, he was drevin be unmercifull tempest nocht far fra Norroway and Scheitland, with incredibill dangeir. Finaly, quhen he had maid ane voit to big ane kirk in the honoure of the Virgine Mary gif he war fortunat to eschape the dangeir of seis, he arrivit in Tay, beside Dundee, not far fra Sanct Nicholas' Chapell, but ony rudder or taikill; and gaif thankis to God and the Blissit Virgine for delivering of him fra sic extreme perill. The place quhare he arrivit was callit Allectum; bot efter his cumming it changit name, and was callid Dundee, quhilk signifyis in our langage, the gift of God. King William, heirand the returning of his brothir, quhome he belevit mony yeris afore deceiflit, come with maist diligence to Dundee, and embrasit him; syne gaif thankis to God and the Blifit Virgine Mary, that deliverit his brothir fra fa mony dangeris. Efter this, he gart maik generall processionis throw the realme, to geif thankis to God for the happy returning of his brothir.

“ Sic thingis done, ane conventioun was maid at Dundee, in the quhilk licence was gevin to Erle David to big ane Abbay in quhat place he plesit of Scotland, and to dotat it with landis and rentis at his pleseir. King William gaif mony priveleges to Dundee, quhilkis induris to thir dayis, David, nocht refusing the benevolence of his brothir, biggit ane Abbay, callit Lundoris, efter the ordour of St Benedict. Ane thing is thair richt mervellus: na man is hurt in that Abbay with eddaris. Thir eddaris lyis in the middis of ane vale, circulit with wod and rinnand watter: throw quhilk they burgeon with mair plentuous nowmer than evir was sene in ony othir partis. Howbeit, na man gettis skaith thair of: for we have fene young barnis play amang thaim but damage or hurt following.”¹

This pleasant spot was supplied with monks from Kelso, of the

Tyronensian order, holding under the reformed rule of St Benedict. Some 380 years later, we find the want of “eddaris” supplied by serpents of a more venomous and deadly nature; demons assuming the human shape.

The Abbots of Lindores, in so far as they can be traced, were,

I. GUIDO. He died 17th June 1219. The event is thus recorded by Fordun:—“Quo die et anno,” (die feilicet Sancti Botulphi, A. D. MCCXIX.¹) “obiit Guido primus Abbas de Londoris, cum ipsum locum a fundamentis construxisset, et officinas competentes maxima ex parte perfecisset, et fere per viginti octo annos monasterium strenue rexisset; monachos viginti sex superfluites relinquens, ordine et religione plenarie informatos; omnes fratres de caritate mutua exhortans, et a transgressionibus absolvens, et ab ipsis absolutus et osculatus, inter verba colloquutionis caput in manu fratris sibi affidentis reclinans, quasi dormiens, hilari vultu quievit in Domino. Cui successit Johannes ejusdem domus monachus.”²

II. JOHN, above mentioned.

III. THOMAS, “vir magnæ sanctitatis,” according to Fordun, died 1273.³ He was succeeded by

IV. JOHN, the prior, who died the following year, and was interred at Kelso.⁴ To him succeeded

V. NICHOLAS, the cellarer.

VII. THOMAS, Abbot, also swears fealty to Edward, 28th August 1296.²

VIII. ADAM, is witness to a charter by John de Dundemor, 30th June 1331;³ and one of David II. anno regni 13. (1342.)⁴

IX. WILLIAM DE ANGUS, Abbot of Lundores, is referred to in a charter of confirmation by Robert III., anno 1392. Vide page 48 of this volume. The next in order is

X. JOHN STEELE, who previously held the office of Prior of Coldingham.⁵

XI. Another JOHN occurs in 1474. See Chartulary, No. 20.

XII. ANDREW, appears in the Chartulary⁶ from 1476 to 1502: in this latter year, of date 3d May, while his successor

XIII. HENRY, in the same record, is mentioned on 20th March, also of 1502.⁷ The apparent discrepancy arises from the erroneous computation of the Old Style, which was not departed from till 1600. This Henry was probably the same who assisted at the condemnation of Patrick Hamilton, Abbot of Ferne, in 1527.

XIV. JOHN LESLEY, the historian, afterwards Bishop of Ross, was for a short time Abbot of Lindores. He obtained the mitre in 1566-7.⁸

XV. This imperfect series of dignitaries terminates with PATRICK LESLEY, second son of Andrew, 5th Earl of Rothes, on whom the Abbacy was bestowed in commendam, and subsequently created into a temporal lordship, 25th December 1600. He was one of the King's suite at the Gowry conspiracy¹—an event which is as likely to have been directed by King James against the Earl of Gowrie, as by his lordship against the “British Solomon.” The Abbey and circumjacent lands remained in the family of Lindores till 1741. It now belongs to that of the Hays of Leys.

In the year 1218, an accident happened at Lindores, by which William prior of Durham eventually lost his life. He had gone into Scotland by order of the Pope's legate, Gualo, accompanied by Walter de Wisebech, archdeacon of the East Riding of Yorkshire, in order to absolve that country from the papal anathema. On their return from Aberdeen about the end of January, the bed-chamber wherein the prior and his monks slept took fire, owing to the carelessness of the butlers, and he, being nearly suffocated, was so affected by the smoke, that he died at Coldingham on the 14th May following.²

In 1268, the Prior of Lindores³ and the Abbot of Dunfermline were sent into England as representatives from the clergy to attend the Council of Ottobonus, the Pope's legate.⁴

DAVID, witnesses a Charter of Confirmation by Ralph, Bishop of Aberdeen, of the Church of Bourdin, 1240, die Sancti Romani Episcopi, (23 October.)

ROBERT, witnesses a grant by William Cumin, Earl of Buchan, of half a mark from Invermer, and a similar one by Margery his Countess, from Inverine. (Before 1240.)

JOHN, witnesses a Charter, by Richard, Bishop of Dunkeld, of the Church of Dull. (Between 1255 and 1272.)

⁴ Fordun, x. 24.

In the Chamberlain Rolls of Scotland,¹ sub anno 1372, the following entry leads the memory back to royal revelries :—

In 1402, the first created Duke in Scotland was interred at Lindores. This was David Duke of Rothsay, eldest son to King Robert III., whom chroniclers assert to have been starved to death at Falkland, by his uncle, the Duke of Albany. The tale is told with a fearful quaintness by old Hector Boece, in “ Buke Sextene ” of his CRONIKLIS ; and we learn therein, that “ His body wes beryit in Lundoris, and kithit miraklis mony yeris eftir : quhil, at last, King James the First began to punis his slayaris ; and fra that time furth, the miraclis ceiffit.” Far be it from me that infidelity that scoffeth and makes light of the legendary lore of our ancestors ; but it does seem somewhat strange that his Grace’s carcase should have possessed such miraculous properties ; as from the same veracious history we learn, that his life was spent otherwise than after the most approved sanctity. Boece says, that during his mother’s lifetime, “ he wes haldin in virtews and honest occupatioun : eftir hir deith, he began to rage in all maner of insolence ; and fulyeit virginis, matronis, and nunnis, be his unbridellit lust.”

In 1488, James, the ninth and last Earl of Douglas, died and was buried at Lindores, where, for the space of four years, he had led a life of compulsory seclusion.² Whether he assumed the cowl or not, does not appear.

There was one famous light connected with this Abbey. Laurence of Lindores, “ rector ecclesie de Crech,”³ and the pope’s inquisitor in Scotland, is described by Fordun¹ as “solidissimus clericus et famosus theologus, vitæ sanetitate quamplurimum collaudatus;” and further² “as one “qui nusquam infra regnum requiem dedit hæreticis vel Lolardis.” This eximious ecclesiastic had his own share of combustibles, having presided on two occasions at the condemnation of Wicliffites. The first was in 1407, when James Resby, an English priest, was condemned by a council of Scotch clergy, and burned at Perth. The second was in 1433, when Paul Crawar, a Bohemian physician, was convicted and roasted at St Andrews for the same heresy. The arguments, by means of which Brother Laurence procured the consummation in these instances, are given by Fordun *loc. cit.*³

This Laurence was a D. C. L. of St Andrews, and professor in that university. Dr Anderson, in his Statistical Account of the Parish of Newburgh, and his echo Mr Leighton, the fag for Mr Bookseller Swan, are pleased to enrol him in the list of Abbots of Lindores. For this assertion no proof exists; and the very fact of his being a lecturer in the university altogether militates against such a supposition.

In 1559, the Abbey of Lindores became a prey to the tender mercies of the Deformers. Its demolition is thus noticed by the archdemon Knox, in a letter to a married woman, with whom he appears to have been too familiar:—“The adversaries” (i. e. the Christians) “perceiving that neither threatening, flatterie, nor deceit, could break the bold constancie and godlie (!) purpose of the lords, barons, gentlemen, and commons, who were there assembled to the number of 3000 in on day's warning, they were content to tak assurance for eight days, permitting unto us fredom of religion in the mean time. In the whilk the Abbey of Lindores, a place of black monks, distant from St Andrewis twelve myles, we reformed ; their altars overthrew we ; their idols, vestments of idolatrie, and mass-books we burnt in their presence, and commanded them to cast away their monkish habits." ¹ This was what the miscreant calls " freedom of religion !" In 1585, the magistrates of Edinburgh purchased the Abbey clock for fifty-five pounds Scots, and placed it in the steeple of St Giles' cathedral. ²

The site of the Abbey of Lindores, like that of Balmerino, is beautiful, and commands a somewhat similar view, overlooking the fertile shores of the Tay. It was of old in the forest of Earnside, of which now not a trace remains. Sibbald calls it " a right sweet situation, and of a most rich soil : witness the vastly big old pear-trees there." Many of these remain to the present day, and produce large quantities of most exquisite fruit. " Age cannot wither them !" ³

The building is now a complete mass of ivy-grown ruins, which, till lately, supplied the commonalty of Newburgh with materials for the erection and repair of their houses. Anathema sint ! No views of the spot are in existence.

a broken seal of the Abbey, is engraved in that ridiculous work, Cordiner's Remarkable Ruins of North Britain," 4to, 1795. And in the Archæologia, xiii, p. 196, is an engraving of another seal, &c. with a dissertation thereon by the Rev. John Brand.

From the beautiful drawings by Howlett after the original seals in the Chapter House—now the property of the Bannatyne Club, facsimiles have been executed in lithography by Mr Leith. The common abbatial seal is placed on the title, and that of Abbot Thomas opposite page 1. For the use of these drawings I am indebted to Mr Laing.

The tail-piece to the present remarks is from the same ancient map at Oxford mentioned in the observations on the Book of Balmerino.

The "Liber Sancte Marie de Lundoris," from which the following pages have been printed, is a small square duodecimo paper volume, containing thirty-one leaves, and is written in a very minute cramp hand.¹ It is, in the valuable and laboriously constructed (!) Catalogue of MSS. in the Advocates' Library, stated to have been "written about 1502." It is pleasant to see conjecture treading so closely on the heels of a date! The foundation charter, oddly enough, is not copied in the Chartulary; but it is supplied (Appendix, No. I.) from the original in the Collections of Sir James Balfour, now in the Faculty Library.

The concluding pages of the "Liber" contain loose memoranda, dated 1530, of the various articles of linen and furniture at Lindores and Eglismagirdell, where formerly was a church, and probably a seat belonging to the abbots. Unfortunately these interesting inventories are extremely defective, and nearly illegible.

Eglismagirdell, or, as it is now called, Exmagirdell, lies in the parish of Dron, in Perthshire. It is thus noticed by the Rev. David Dow, in the former Statistical Account of Scotland, ix. 481, under the head of “Antiquities :”—

“There have been, in former times, two small chapels in this parish. One of these, which stood in the east corner of the parish, is now totally in ruins, no vestige of it remaining except some part of the foundation below ground, and human skulls and bones, which are sometimes dug up, or discovered in the face of a bank where the soil is washed away by the impetuous torrents of the Farg, on the verge of which it has stood, just at the place where it issues from the mountains into the plain. The other is in the west end of the parish, and still remains in a ruinous state; the walls are tolerably entire, with an enclosed burial-ground around it, which is still the place of interment for many families in the parish and neighbourhood. This part of the parish, which is entirely separated from the rest by an interjacent part of the parish of Dunbarnie, bears the name of Ecclesiamagirdle, the origin of which is uncertain; but probably has been given in honour of some saint. Some explain it to signify ‘The Church of St Magdalen.’ These chapels may probably have been places of worship, erected for the conveniency of the religious in this corner, who were dependants on the Abbey of Lindores.”

Mr Dow, with becoming propriety, confesses his own ignorance, and that of others, of the origin of the word Eglismagirdell—a point on which I regret my inability to throw any light. But my friend, the Rev. Dr Anderson of Newburgh, speaking as usual ex cathedra, says, in reference to the Cross of Mugdrum, in the immediate vicinity, that “the term Mugdrum is obviously a corruption of Magriddon, the saint in whose honour it may have been erected, and to whom the lands of Mugdrum were dedicated.” This, of course, the doctor’s ape—the Mr Leighton aforesaid—duly approbates ; and further informs us, that to this, “ the patron saint of the district, the church of Ecclesia Magridden, or Exmagirdle, as it is now called, in Strathern, was also dedicated.” I hope the reverend gentleman knows more of geology than hagiology ; for in the calendar of no church is such a saint enrolled—certainly not in either that of Rome, Greece, or England. What beatified names the inveterated annals of the Kirk may embrace, I cannot say !
